By now, you are probably going down the list we sent you, preparing your documents, having interviews with schools, reading up on Korean history, and maybe even brushing up on some Korean words. Your flight date is swiftly approaching and you’re in the last stages of preparation before you’re ready to arrive in Korea: ready to say “annyeong haseyo” to the taxi driver at the airport, ready to try famous Korean delicacies like Kimchi and Soju, ready to start that new travel blog. You’ve got almost everything you envision needing, including enough gusto to get you through the first few days of culture shock and jetlag!

But what about the teaching? Are you ready to face a couple dozen classes of 10 to 40 kids (like these ones on the left) and teach them English? Are you ready to motivate and inspire children to learn your language without knowing a word of their language? Are you prepared for the classroom management issues that may arise from a bunch of likable but occasionally unruly schoolchildren? We are not trying to scare you. The staff at Adventure Teaching has all taught in Korea, and we believe that teaching is a challenging, satisfying, dynamic, and professional career path, and we firmly believe that you’ll be an excellent teacher too. However, as a new teacher, you need to be able to answers these questions. You need the basic tools and the knowledge to turn an unmotivated classroom of 40 into an excited, cooperative group. You’ll need to know how to explain grammatical concepts, current thinking behind second language acquisition and use critical thinking skills to imply these things (and much more!) in the classroom. No matter who you are, if you are teaching in Korea for the first time, you’ll need some training! Without it you may not have the confidence you need to step into this new experience with two firm feet. We want to introduce you to a valuable opportunity to become more knowledgeable about teaching ESL.

It is hard to tell what sort of training you can count on upon arrival at your new school. Some schools will hold week-long group training sessions, while some might make you wait months before offering any orientation and training. Some schools will put you at the front of the class on Day 1, while some might let you sit in on classes for a week before starting. Your level of training is dependent on your school and when you arrive, so be prepared for anything. The reality, however, is that very few schools do a sufficient job of training. Getting an TEFL (Teaching English as a Foreign Language) Certification will give you a head-start and a considerable upper hand on other applicants. You should probably trust us on this one.
Though a TEFL Certificate isn’t currently required to teach in South Korea, things may soon change with the flourishing interest and growth in teaching ESL abroad. So what will it do for you now? This certification will set you and your resume apart from the sea of international applicants. Take it from us – as business owners in the industry, we sift through many of these applications ourselves; seeing a TEFL certification on a resume gives us more confidence in matching teachers with suitable job placements. Upon the completion of your 100-hour teaching certification course, you may even get a pay increase of 100,000 Korean won per month (approx. $100), which is a considerable amount of money added onto each paycheck. And what will you do with that extra money? Take a weekend trip down to the beautiful southern beaches of Busan. Go hiking in Korea’s vast, awe-inspiring network of mountains.

Enroll in a language class of your own, so you can talk to Koreans about hobbies and K-Pop. More money means more freedom to make the most of your Korean experience.

Of course, the real benefit of getting a TEFL certificate is for your own experience. Students can sense how much or how little experience a teacher has, and are more likely to act out if you have no clue what you’re doing. A TEFL course teaches you not only how to teach, but how to set up your classroom to minimize behavioral issues and maximize results. The teachers who come to Korea without certification learn how to teach the hard way. An uncertified teacher will drone through lesson plans that end up being horribly ineffective and slug through difficult material in a complicated manner, while students stare blankly at their textbooks. Some teachers lose rapport with students because of a lack of organization and confidence, or because of an all too casual disposition. By the time the uncertified teacher figures out what they’re doing, the contract is almost up!

Imagine skipping most of what we call an unpleasant “trial and error” teaching phase. Wouldn’t it be nice to know, right off the bat, how to manage a classroom? How to answer questions? How to motivate Korean students effectively? With a TESL Certification, you’ll have a better grasp on how to turn those 30 energetic, distracted children into a motivated, engaged classroom ready to delve into the English language. You’ll be able to build practice lesson plans and learn how to explain those foreign grammatical concepts in English succinctly. You’ll even have personal email feedback from a tutor, an experienced ESL teacher with insight and skill into the ins and outs of an ESL classroom at all levels. This doesn’t mean you won’t have classes that don’t listen or lessons plans that you bomb every now and then, but you will have a better idea about what works and what doesn’t – and have a bigger toolbox to work from.

Expat Voices: “(The three-day GEPIK) Orientation gave me some information about living in Korea and what to expect in the culture, but wasn't very informative about what to expect in the classroom. I began teaching with a limited idea of the expectations from my school, and am rarely given feedback on my teaching.”

“But wait,” you say. “I’m leaving for Korea soon, and I have a job. I can’t possibly finish 100 hours before I get to Korea.” No worries. You don’t have to.

You don’t even have to have to finish the course before you leave for Korea. Adventure Teaching will inform your employer that you are in the process of finishing the course, and you can finish it while you are working, during your downtime. If you have done any research into teaching foreign language courses, you know that there are hundreds of companies and courses available. It’s hard to even know where to begin when looking for a course or analyzing its quality, so we’ve done the research for you. We recommend the 120-hour course because it’s the most comprehensive course of its kind available. It’s by far the best value and gives you tools to teach even after the course is over. Why?

✓ If you are planning on teaching children, the 120-hour is a must-purchase. The section about teaching young learners gives you specific tips about classroom management that every new teacher must know. It will teach you how to establish your classroom in a way to minimize disruptions, and how to reach out to children who are behind, lost, or apathetic.

✓ The content is extremely comprehensive. You get the same package online or in the classroom, and it includes specialized endorsements for English for Young Learners and Business English. This special knowledge makes you even more valuable to your future employer.

✓ You work through the whole course under the guidance of a tutor, a real live professional ESL teacher, who provides feedback on your work.

✓ You’ll have access not only to video tutorials within the course, but also to TEFLVideos.com, a library of over 100 “How-To” videos with step-by-step instructions for lessons, activities, classroom management skills, and more.

✓ You’ll get a certificate for successfully completing an online grammar course called Grammar Advisor, which reinforces all those grammar rules you learned in high school but may have forgotten about.

✓ What if you’re presented with a grammar question you can’t answer? Koreans are notorious for asking questions about the complicated grammar points. You can use Grammar Advisor as a resource once you begin teaching! You can ask BT’s grammar pros about grammar questions as well as how to teach grammar points. You’ll be able to come up with answers quickly and know how to answer them for future reference.

A Parting Thought...

Unruly school children? In Korea, where discipline was practically reinvented?

That’s right. Kids will be kids no matter where they are. In the past, teachers commanded respect in Korean society simply by the stature of their position in the community, which has engrained strict discipline and behavior into much of the Korea culture. This, unfortunately, comes as no consolation today as the rise of hectic English classrooms and “energetic” Korean students continue to test the patience and experience of Western teachers.

Our advice? Just ask the Korean teachers. Public school teachers in elementary and middle school note that the younger generation of students are more laid back about education, and are losing respect for the profession of teaching. They text on their cell phones, talk in Korean in English class, and often fall asleep. Korean Teachers used to be able to respond to blatant disrespect by striking misbehaved children, but corporal punishment has been recently banned in Seoul and Gyeonggi province. Obviously we think this is a good thing; nonetheless, this recent development has emboldened every classroom’s biggest trouble-makers. Imagine yourself in a classroom full of 40 kids, and one of the students keeps disrupting the class. Are you prepared for that situation? What’s the right balance between disciplinarian and “Mr./Mrs. Fun Native teacher?”

And what about adults? Adults pay for their lessons and are presumably more motivated to learn than children, but do you know how to explain the difficult grammatical structure of English so that they’ll learn to communicate at a higher level? Can you explain when to use the present simple tense and when to use the present perfect tense? Can you explain the differences between “I will go,” and “I am going to” in a simple, easy to understand way?
